In looking for earlier ancestors of Joseph Penn Lynch, Mrs. Hines comes across realms of information on Lynch families and their connections in sixteen southern states. This large book contains numerous court, land and military records and is extremely well documented and indexed.

THE TENNESSEE COLONY (Compiled by Rhuy K. McMurry, P.O. Box 573, Greensburg, Kansas 67054. Published 1966. Price $7.50.)

Reviewed by Cleo Miller Webb.

"The Tennessee Colony" received its title from a colony of former Tennesseans living in a small community south of Hutchinson, Kansas, most of whom were descendants of two couples: Hugh Montgomery, Jr., born ca. 1753, and his wife Elizabeth ____; and John McMurray, born ca. 1750, and his wife Martha Linn (Lynn), all of Lancaster District, South Carolina. The descendants had inter-married and moved to Tennessee, Georgia, Mississippi, Arkansas and Kansas, as well as other states. The principal names are McMurray, Moore, Montgomery, Freeman and Stewart.

You will have no trouble following the numbering of each ancestor if you read the instructions in the preface. The book consists of 195 bound mimeographed pages, interestingly written. It is well indexed and contains several complete wills and biographical sketches.

A BIRD'S EYE VIEW OF ENGLISH RESEARCH IN 1965
Lillian Johnson Gardiner

I am sure I was grinning from ear to ear the morning I was introduced to the Secretary of the Society of Genealogists in London and allowed to become a member of that august body. It is a non-profit Association made up of people all over the world, who are interested in genealogy and who pay an annual subscription to support the organization, which consists of a library (one of the best), a magazine and genealogical services. Founded in 1911, it now is housed in a fine old Victorian house at 37 Harrington Gardens, S.W. London, near Gloucester Road underground station. I really felt I had accomplished a feat when I learned to go and come from my hotel on the underground alone.

Somehow our English cousins deflate our ego very quickly when we appear, pedigree in hand, seeking to trace ancestry on their side of the Atlantic. They usually attribute our motives to one or more of the following reasons:

1. Curiosity;
2. Desire to obtain symbols of status which a pedigree is generally considered to afford;
3. Hunger for roots in the more settled age of our ancestors;
4. Planning or hoping to claim an inheritance or title.

Now I admit freely my trip to England was mainly motivated by a desire for all four of these reasons, but as they say of coats armour - "differenced".

1. A natural aftermath of years of English History and Family History is curiosity to see the early homeland of our ancestors. I understand better now what made our ancestors tick.
2. As to status symbol pedigrees - I love every new ancestor I can legitimately add to my pedigree chart and get a real thrill from every one on it - Beggar, Butcher, Baker or Baron.
3. In this day of world upheaval, as we stand on the edge of the moon and peep around for a place to hide from the atomic bombs all the neighbor boys are playing with, it is soothing to reflect on the hundreds of years of day to day living to which much of Europe attests in every walk of life.
4. As for the inheritance and title - I wanted to prove a Magna Charta line during this 750th anniversary year of the signing of that first great document of human rights. I have proof that my American ancestors fought in every early war for independence in which our country was involved. What is more natural than to believe their ancestors fought in this noble battle, too.

I had a fifth reason. I wanted to learn how to do research in England, Wales, Ireland and Scotland. What was available, where to look for it. One trip to England didn't make me an expert but it sure helped open my eyes to the enormity of the task I had set before myself. I hope I can pass on to you a few of the interesting and useful pointers I gathered on what an American needs to know in order to find the origin of his English ancestors.

If perchance you hope to claim the inheritance or title you believe belonged to "Grandpa" see a solicitor, "lawyer to us", and let him explain the Limitation Act of 1939 which provides that funds administered by the Crown cannot be claimed after a lapse of more than 12 years. Funds held by the Supreme Court rarely exceed £50 or $500, and a list of these may be consulted free in the Eastern Corridor, Ground Floor, of Royal Courts of Justice, Strand, London, W.C. As a result of the Royal Assent to the Humble Address of the Lords, no claim can be made to a peerage which has been in abeyance more than 100 years.

I had the pleasure of working in the Society of Genealogist's Library several days, and loved every minute of it that I wasn't frozen to death. Our English cousins are a hearty race - I located the heater and ran for it every morning. To become a member, suitable references and recommendations of two members plus entrance fees and annual dues allow you the use of the library, a discount on services, and no charge for suggestions on research, along with the GENEALOGIST'S MAGAZINE quarterly. Non-members may use the library on payment of 17s 6d ($2.50) per day or 10s6d ($1.50) half day. Worth it-for the books are arranged on open shelves and may be browsed through at will ... all 30,000 volumes. Good indices are available and the books arranged according to counties, etc.

One of their most prized possessions is Boyd's Marriage Index - a whole huge wall full of books - a typewritten index of marriages from the Parish Registers, Bishops' Transcripts, and Marriage Licenses of the country, collected from printed and other sources available at the time it was prepared, limited to the period 1538-1837. The index is divided by counties. A large Miscellaneous section goes to the year 1775. Each county is divided into ten periods of about 25 years each. The volumes are indexed under the names of the men and women separately. The index gives the year, the surnames and christian names of both parties, and the parish where the marriage took place.

The index today is in 531 volumes, covering part of 16 counties, indexes about 2,626 parish registers, and contains about 6 to 7 million names - about 12% of all marriages which took place in England before 1837. The counties and number of parishes follow:

Cambridgeshire	170	Lancashire	101
Cornwall	202	Middlesex and London	160
Cumberland (to 1700)	34	Norfolk	146
Derbyshire	80	Northumberland	84
Devonshire	169	Shropshire	125
Durham	72	Somerset	120
Essex	374	Suffolk	389
Gloucestershire	121	Yorkshire	179

I read somewhere that Mr Boyd left some other original work to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints with the understanding that they would complete it. I surely hope it is this index. It is marvelous, what there is of it.

The Society also has an outstanding collection of Harleian Society Manuscripts, some printed and some in typescript, of particular interest as they contain copies of many of the pedigrees taken at Heraldic Visitations made between 1530 and 1687, which conferred full rights to bear the arms therein specified on the families then recorded, the information collected being in most cases legally provable though not necessarily complete.

One of Laurence's cousins in Virginia has a letter from Garter King of Arms stating that the Visitations are considered proof of pedigree unless, as in a few cases, additional information has come to light that proves an error. The Visitations at the College of Arms are from original sources and considered correct. However, many copies have been made of the original records - some carelessly done work is not acceptable. Articles have been written showing which are and which are not correct editions.

One may visit the College of Arms, Queen Victoria Street, London, E.C.4 but all work there is done for you by the Officer on duty for a fee. The College consists of three Kings of Arms: Garter, Clarenceux and Norroy-Ulster; six Heralds: Somerset, Chester, Windsor, Richmond, Lancaster and York; and four Pursuivants: Rouge Croix, Rouge Dragon, Portcullis and Bluemantle. We had the pleasure of knowing personally Honorable John Brooklitt and his wife, Bluemantle Pursuivant, when they visited in Washington in 1964. They hold office by letters patent under the Great Seal and are all members of the Royal Household. The office is open from 10 to 4, Monday through Friday. The officers may do private genealogical work if they wish. For about $500, and with absolutely irrefutable proof of your lineage back to an early armigerous family an American today may have his right to this Grant of Arms approved and registered.

The main manuscript groups at the College consist of the official Visitation Records, the Records of Grants and Confirmation of Arms and the Registered Pedigrees, the last two groups being added to even today. Here I would save my time and write ahead for what I wanted. Then, if it is found, it would be interesting to go out and see perhaps an original pedigree or grant to one of your ancestors.

To do research in England as elsewhere requires previous homework. I cannot stress too much the value of having your ancestor pinpointed at some particular spot. Perhaps you can find this from a will, as I was fortunate enough to do with my Captain Robert Wynne who left a will in Virginia leaving property in Canterbury to his sons. My first side trip was to Canterbury, that quaint old, now partly-walled city dating from pre-Roman times, with its exquisite Cathedral started in 587 A.D., the oldest in England. I did not have too much trouble tracing a Magna Charta line from Robert's grandfather, who had been Mayor of Canterbury, through the Coppins, Dennes and Ardennes - thanks to the good Kent records.

Perhpas a ship's list will show your ancestors' place of origin - though these aren't always reliable, for sometimes they only show the port from which they sailed. If you can't pinpoint them from an early family record, study the place they lived, and their neighbors. Learn the history of their environment. It is possible this will reveal where they came from. Many groups came over together and the general locality from which they migrated may be learned from other families. Then study the history and customs of this locality and know where its records are kept. This will save much time and trouble in England and time is money when travelling.

My husband keeps saying "How does one go about finding an Ancestor in English records if they have no idea where to start looking for him?" Well, it would be better to be born lucky rather than so rich and good looking. At least you'd better not have an ordinary name. Take the name "Hardaway" for instance. An Englishwoman, professional genealogists, and I searched all the known places in the Society's library and only found it three or four times - all around the Canterbury area. We narrowed that search quickly by using the Great Name Index, The Great File Boxes, Boyd's Marriage Index, the Index to Wills and Administrations in the Perogative Court of Canterbury and, I believe, the same for York. This court covers all of England. We have the Canterbury Index here, I hope someday we can get the York one too.

In English research as at home, genealogy is where you find it, and not always where we think it should be. Laurence asked me to check on the will of Chaney Boyce, b. 1599, d. ca 1650-60, son of Rev. John Boys or Boyce, Dean of Canterbury. After checking will indices for Maidstone, the county town of Kent, and other printed matter at the Library I was getting discouraged. One of the "Fellows" of the Society had befriended me and invited me to be her guest for tea when it was announced at 4 o'clock in the Society's drawing room. Members and guests are invited to partake for 1 shilling (about 15 ¢) of tea and cookies, or sometimes good home-made cake, provided by the housekeeper. I was torn between the desire to rest and visit with local members over a cup of tea and the thought of all that time I was missing from research - 10 to 5 seems a mighty short day over there. This rest proved most valuable. As we discussed my problems over the tea table she informed me that perhaps my trouble was that during the Commonwealth (1649-1660), Cromwell took all rights away from the Churches and required all business to be carried on through the Perogative Courts of Canterbury, whose records today are all housed in the General Records Office at Somerset House, and suggested I check there.

One of the best finding aids being published at present is a series of County maps for every county in England. They sell for $1.00 each and may be ordered from The Institute of Heraldic & Genealogical Studies, 58 North Gate, Canterbury, Kent, England. On my Kent map the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of Kent Parishes are shown by different color lines, with dates of commencement of Registers given in each parish. A parish without dates had no separate register. These are marvelous when you have an approximate location on your family and can't put a finger on them there. Check the map and see what parishes surround it. Branch out and check them especially for marriages, for there as here it was easier to go a short distance over a county line to church or the courthouse than to go a long muddy road or ford a creek to get to the local parish church.

Of course one of our first steps is to check those wonderful Parish Registers. Some are deposited in county or diocesan record offices. Until Thomas Cromwell gave the order in 1538, no record of baptisms, marriages or burials was required to be kept, altho a few of the clergy had done so anyway. Some were lax thereafter, but most followed the order, though many records are lost to us today by fire, erosion of time, carelessness, etc. In 1597, it was ordered that the old paper books be transcribed on parchment and some errors doubtless crept in then. It was also ordered that a copy be made of each register and sent to the Bishop. Today these are called Bishop's transcripts. They are most valuable for they often fill a gap where the original has been lost. The Parish Registers still retained by the clergy may be seen at reasonable times and places. Actually according to law the Clergy are obliged "At all reasonable times" to allow searches to be made in any register in their keeping, but they are not bound to permit photocopying of registers, to supply certificates, or to make searches, though they may consent to do so for a fee. Put on your best Sunday manners and go calling. If is safer to write first and make an engagement, then be sure to be on time. Check for your most important information first for an afternoon can slip by mighty fast and you might be very ill to awake and find you had frittered away the time just looking. Parish registers are still kept today, but the vital statistics are more accurate and may be gotten at the Public Records Office after 1837. In 1831, public records abstracts were published listing all prior to 1813 as to when they were started, dates records available, etc.

Have you every wondered how you could judge a child's age by his baptismal date in English records? Well, you can't. True, a baptism is usually recorded within a month of birth, but several years can elapse. However it is something on which to base an approximate age. Many of the early registers are in Latin, but from 1733, law required they be written in English.

England and Scotland offer much to avid genealogists, but I nearly had a nightmare when I realized there are 16,630 parishes in England's 52 counties today. The parish is the smallest unit of several territorial divisions of both church and civil administration and here for many hundreds of years has been the center of the community's life. Ecclesiastically a parish is a district served by a clergyman of the Church of England. A township may have one or several parishes. Several thousand have churches of ancient origin, most of which have records of births, deaths, and marriages in more or less complete states of preservation. One could spend several life-times searching these source materials, approximately one in fifteen is still extant.

This made me wonder whether I should be so eternally grateful to all those folks who have published so many of the public records. It can be a real problem to try to check all the printed sources before delving into original records. I'm sure that is what all officials feel one should do first. Oh me! We'll have to have specialized researchers before long. Not a bad idea.

For 500 years or thereabout, England and Wales have been one country. Governmental affairs are conducted in London for all the people. In everything else they differ languages, literature, tradition, history, and after seeing some of their rugged country, and freezing in the snow in Wales last May, I know why they are such hardy folk - they have to be to survive.

Back to that elusive ancestor - another step one might take is to check the Feet of Fines, some of which have been abstracted and printed and some are in manuscript form. These are something like our deeds. It seems someone decided the easiest way to prove a title to land was to get in a court controversy and have the court declare the rightful owner. Or you could say The FINES or Final Concord, was an agreement made by leave of the court and embodied in its records, between the parties to the suit, which, except in earliest periods, was normally intended to lead to the fine as a means of conveying or settling freehold property. The earliest one, dated 1 Dec. 1182, is in the P.R.O. These records are practically intact to 1834 when the procedure changed.

The fine looked like a sheet of paper with the bottom third used for the feet of fine and the top two-thirds divided down the center and identical indentures written on all three parts. Somewhere I saw it explained thus: The chirographer writing the fine had to make three copies on a single piece of parchment. Two were written head to head at right angles to the third which ran across the foot of the paper. The foot was retained for the public records and the two indentures handed to the parties. As a safeguard against fraud, the fine, after engrossment, was read and proclaimed in court four times, in four successive terms, and these proclamations endorsed on the foot of the fine.

If our time doesn't run out we should check the vocational records such as Guild Rolls, Apprentice Books, as well as college rolls and professional records. And of course, Boyd's Index to Marriages which has been previously described and the Key to which is in our own library.

Wills and administrations have been recorded in England from earliest times. Mr. Camp has also written a most helpful book called WILLS AND THEIR WHEREABOUTS. I wouldn't even attempt to try to explain to you how to find under what ecclesiastical jurisdiction your ancestor's will would have been filed, yet this information is necessary before you can find where the original records have been deposited. This book goes into detail and is a must for this type of work. It's in our library too.

Before the Married Women's Property Act of 1882, most married women had no property to bequeath so did not make wills, though some widows and spinsters perhaps owned property and willed it.

As I pointed out in the beginning there is a lot to know, and I would have gotten along much better had I known before I went to England what I know now. That's why I'm trying to go into details on some subjects, hoping these pointers will really be of help to some of you on your next trip. I thought I knew what a "First Fruits and Tenth" meant, but when the First Fruits turned out to be the payment made to the Pope for his upkeep, and the Tenth was levied first for recovery of the Holy Land, and later used on other expeditions against the infidels, I decided to check some other terms I saw used often.

"Queen Anne's Bounty" took the form not of remitting the payment of First Fruits and Tythes but of applying the sum received from the larger especially to benefices to make up the smaller, which was used to help maintain the poor clergy.

The King's Rememberancers Constat Book has been kept since 1709, off and on, until today. It gives the names of living heads of the households and their incumbents and shows the value of their income less a 10th of the amount which is deducted. I may not be too clear on this, but sounds like another taxation scheme to me.

An Assize could be and was three different things: (a) Regulations, as to weaving, etc.; (b) procedure to establish possession of land, etc.; or (c) Itinerant Court, originally designed for such procedure. Coram Rege Plea - Criminal Cases - were made before the King in person, as they say in "Court of King's Bench". "Court of Common Plea" was held at the Bench at Westminster and applied to civil cases, and the court did not follow the King. The Plea Rolls are the pleas with the judgments made stated thereon.

A prerequisite for working handily in English Records is to learn or have at hand the "Key to Regnal Years", as all the early dates are written and reckoned as such. This of course means the years in which the monarch reigned. Few of us would need to know the earliest kings, but beginning with William I whose reign started 25 Dec. 1066, to Henry VIII who reigned from 1509 to 1547, the records are different from those used today and are often very scarce. I suppose this is properly called the Feudal Period. The first record we have of it is The Doomesday Book, which is an almost complete list of the landowners, both tenants in chief and undertenants, arranged geographically, in the year 1086. This is considered the start of Feudal Genealogy.

The Inquisitions Post Mortums contain a list of fees held by a tenant at his death and names his heir, etc. Monastic Cartularies, or private registers of deeds, compiled by the large monastic houses often give considerable genealogy. One of the main sources of records in this period was the Pipe Rolls. This name was apparently given to the Great Roll of the Exchequer because of its shape when rolled. The document could consist of several parchment membranes attached end to end, or attached at the top, and rolled. It records year by year the money due the Royal Exchequer, commencing about 1154 A.D.

From Henry VIII, 1509-1547, to the middle of the reign of George III, 1760-1820, are the years we are most likely to be interested in, and fortunately the records are much better. If you found a record saying your ancestor was, uh- hung in 9 Anne - of course you'd want to know just what year this was. Anne reigned 8 Mar. 1702 - 31 July 1714, and counting, we find 9 Anne is 1711.

The helpful book INTRODUCING GENEALOGY by Arthur J. Willis, pages 84 and 85, lists the Regnal Years, showing the exact day and month the reign began as this is necessary to be technically correct. For our purpose the years usually serve as:

Henry VIII	1509-1547	James II	1685-1688
Edward VI	1547-1553	William III	1689-1702
Mary	1553-1558	Mary - Jointly	1694-1702
Elizabeth	1558-1601	Anne	1702-1714
James I	1603-1625	George I	1714-1727
Charles I	1625-1649	George II	1727-1760
Commonwealth	1649-1660	George III	1760-1820
Charles II	1660-1685

(No Regnal years are assigned during the Commonwealth period while Cromwell was in charge as Charles II dated his reign from this time assuming he should have rightfully been on the throne.)

In 1856, the Public Records Office was built to house accumulated records of various State departments and secular courts. Inquiries should be addressed to Keeper of the Records, P.R.O., Chancery Lane, London. Some 47 miles of shelving hold the less used records. Goodness only knows how many miles there are for the often used records such as Censuses. Censuses have been taken every 10 years since 1801 except 1941 (war) and they are arranged by parishes and in the order in which the houses come on the streets. The 1841 census is the first that gives much genealogical data - it is much like our 1850 census.

Time is running out but I do want to tell you briefly about a few other libraries that you would not want to miss. A first visit to any library is relatively unprofitable as we have to spend much time learning our way around, But here again the broader our base of knowledge the more easily we can recognize valuable materials. We may feel stupid but it isn't necessary to act accordingly. The Public Records Office is a very complex arrangement, and a great deal of time may be saved by knowledge of the organization of the search rooms and their routine.

Our first qualification is a Readers Ticket which may be obtained from the Secretary. Write in advance for an application which will require a letter of introduction from your Embassy to the Foreign Office, which will in turn forward it to the P.R.O., or it may be from your Senator or some well known figure whose office would be recognized abroad. Once in, your first lines of attack are lists, indices, calendars, abstracts, etc. Most records over 50 years old may be examined free if you have a ticket. Legal records after 1902 are not open to the public without permission of the department concerned. All legal records after 1842 can only be seen by payment of a fee in the Legal Search Room.

If you have done your home work and studied AN INTRODUCTION TO THE USE OF THE PUBLIC RECORDS by V. H. Galbreath, former Deputy Keeper of the Records, you will have had a practical introduction to the National Archives. Then study the COMPREHENSIVE GUIDE TO THE CONTENTS OF THE PUBLIC RECORDS OFFICE, Volume I, Legal Records and Volume II, State Papers and Departmental Records. Volume I is an important source of historical information. Broadly speaking it comprises, together with legal and judicial records of all dates all the National Archives of the period beginning with the Doomesday Book in 1086, and ending with the death of Henry VII in 1509. Volume II deals with administrative records subsequent to the latter date. It is broken down into domestic, foreign and colonial records. Our interest in Colonial Papers, General Series (C.O.1) 1574-1757, is incorporated in 69 volumes. These are the papers relating to the American and West Indian Colonies. This class ends in 1688, and from this date most of the American papers are to be found in Class (C.O.5) which class comprises original correspondence and entry books of the Board of Trade and the Secretary of State, together with Acts, Sessional Papers, and Miscellaneous records arranged under the several colonies or provinces. This volume is fascinating reading, as it is full of explanatory statements regarding terms used often in English records which are latin in fact and indeed to many of us. You've heard and used the term "Papal Bull". How would you describe a "bull" - not the four-legged variety? The bull is a leaden or other metallic seal, or letter sealed therewith. One from the Pope would be a "Papal Bull".

Another Library which one should not miss is that of the British Museum. It is divided into two sections, printed books and manuscripts. Here again one must have a letter of introduction from our Embassy or your Senator, someone in public life whose position they would recognize and who has personal knowledge of the applicant, to support your application in writing for permission to use the Reading Room or the Students' Room of the Manuscript Department. Tickets are issued for various periods of time - usually not over a year. However it is only necessary to have one letter of introduction, though a form is filled out for each ticket. The Reading Room is open on weekdays, 9-5, Tuesdays and Thursdays to 9 p.m., except for the week beginning first Monday in May which is a holiday.

The main reading room is circular, about 140 feet in diameter, lit from a glass dome, with central space for supervising officers. Around the circular desk-height bookcases are ranged the General Catalogues in many large volumes. Beyond this radiates the readers' desks with comfortable seats and local lighting. All round the outer walls are tiers upon tiers of filled bookshelves. The first 9 tiers are accessible from the floor of the room and you may take them to your desk for perusal. Upper tiers and other stock-rooms are open to Museum staff only, and these literally millions of books may be found in the files and requested. The more valuable books must be read in the North Library. This is the biggest library in the country, a complete reference library for all publications of the last century or more. A few privately printed books may not be found here, but The Crown had claimed on demand for the Royal Library a copy of any book entered at Stationer's Hall, a right confirmed by statute in 1709 - 8 Anne, though it has not always been seriously enforced. This is similar to our Copyright Act which requires we send two copies of any copyrighted book to the National Archives in Washington. In England their Copyright Act of 1842 made it mandatory too, and since that time the Museum has them all.

As First Vice President National of the Huguenot Society Founders of Manakin in the Colony of Virginia, I was especially interested in early Huguenot Records to be found in England. Some Old Threadneedle Church records are now at a French Protestant Church in Soho Square, Rev. DuBois, Pastor. This church was founded in 1550 but the first ten years of records are missing - however 1560 dates are not to be sneezed at. At one time the Threadneedle church burned, but was quickly restored. Perhaps this is what happened to the missing records. The Church had to be moved from Threadneedle St. because of the expansion of The Royal Exchange in 1840, it then went to St. Martins, and after that in 1890 to No. 9, Soho Square. Old papers of the Huguenot Society of London Library are in the hands of Miss Irene Scouloudi, M. Sc. (Econ.), F.S.A., Honorary Sec., The Huguenot Society of London, 67 Victoria Road.

The Guildhall Library, Corporation of London, also has some french records. The Huguenots came to England in large numbers in 1550 and again in 1680. The Threadneedle Church Register, also those of other London churches, Norwich from 1596, Canterbury from 1581, Southampton from 1567, etc. are deposited with Non-Parochial Registers at P.R.O. Most have been published by the Huguenot Society whose main library is now at London University.

Jewish ancestry is not difficult to trace in London, most of them came in during Cromwell's time, and records are good from about 1657. The Jewish Historical Society of England and others have published many good records.

Roman Catholics having suffered considerable intolerance before 1829 are difficult to trace, however they met and kept secret registers of baptisms and marriages from an early period. Marriages had to be solemnized in the parish church, though another ceremony could be held later. Recusant rolls in the P.R.O. register the more "notorious" Catholics from about 1600 to 1700.

Much of what I know about Research in Scotland was gleaned from a very charming and erudite Scotchman, owner of "Grants", one of the largest bookshops in Edinburgh. He told me of the records of the Lord Lyon, King of Arms, H. M. Register House, Edinburgh, Scottish counterpart of Kings of Arms, of College of Arms in London. He suggested the following as perhaps the most important reference books on Scottish families:

THE RETURNS OF LAND AND OWNERS, published starting about 1850.

STATISTICAL ACCOUNT OF SCOTLAND by John Sinclair, published 1790, 21 volumes, very prized.

THE RAGMAN'S ROLL, 2 volumes, Folio.

I also found that the National Records were preserved at the General Register House, Edinburgh, a worthy list of which may be found in A GUIDE TO THE PUBLIC RECORDS OF SCOTLAND deposited in H. M. GENERAL REGISTER HOUSE, EDINBURGH by Matthew Livingstone, Deputy Keeper, 1905.

Local records are in Sheriff's Offices and Town Clerk's Offices throughout the counties. Church records are either with the clergy or in the Strong Room of General Assembly Hall, of the Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh. Early births, marriages and deaths from 1560 to 1855 are at Registrar General's Office, New Register House, Edinburgh. Censuses, 1841 through 1871, are at the same office. Old records are hard to read and one usually needs the help of a local genealogist.

I was quite interested to read that the present Garter King of Arms believes that four factors chiefly govern success or failure in tracing pedigrees: 1. Status, 2. Name, 3. Continuity, 4. Records. That is to say: a family of eminent status, with a rare surname, and distinctive christian names that has maintained continuity with its past by living in or owning land in the same place, pursuing the same work, etc., should be fairly easy to follow, if - big IF - the relevant records happen to be well preserved. In proportion, as one of these requisites is lacking, we encounter difficulties. The statement is made that only two English families can trace their ancestors in the male line to a Saxon Ancestor before 1066. These are the Arden and Berkeley lines. A few other families can trace to doomesday ancestor tenants of 1086 A.D.

I found Laurence a new ancestor, Ralph Hawkins, of Preston near Favorsham. He stated in his request for leave for his daughter Sarah Hawkins, widow of John Catlett, to marry Lodowick Rowzee, 1626, that he lived in Preston but the wedding would be held at Favorsham because it was more convenient for the guests.

The third thing that Laurence asked me to find for him I spent more time on than anything else - than everything else - I did while in London - with no luck at all. All I am sure of is that the records are not in certain places as to who Jane, wife of Thomas Gregory (headrights to Charles City County, Virginia, 1653) was -

It's difficult to manage a fun trip and a memorable trip at the same time. Fun things are not always memorable and memorable things are not always fun, and they do take a bit more doing and preparation, so that one has the basic knowledge to appreciate and understand art, architecture, and the history of the countries visited. We appreciate things so much more if we know why they are important. So my last bit of advice when one is planning an expensive, maybe once in a lifetime trip, is plan, plan, plan and work out from advance study a system that will avoid making your trip a wild goose chase. It's worth it in the long run.

Mrs. W.A. Ford, 3329 N.E. 20th, Amarillo, Texas 79107, sent a clipping from the June 9, 1967 issue of THE AMARILLO DAILY NEWS, reporting the eighth annual TENNESSEE RE-UNION, a gathering started by R.O. Draper, 1001 Carter, Amarillo, in 1960 to collect former residents of Tennessee. Last year about 300 former residents and 1000 visitors attended. Mrs. Ford also commented on reading about "ANSEARCHIN'" NEWS in the same issue of the paper. It contains a column titled "Trailing Family Trees" by Dorothy Nordyke, who reviewed our magazine. We thank you! We have received several inquiries.

A new genealogy column, "Cajuns, Creoles, Pirates and Planters," by Damon A. Veach is appearing in the DAILY IBERIAN, P.O. Box 1270, New Iberia, Louisiana 70560. DID GRANDMOTHER MAKE THE "NEWS" IN HER DAY?

(By William A. Burns, 2721 West San Miguel, Phoenix, Arizona 85017)

Most all genealogists and family tree researchers seem to go "all-out" to find facts to prove some tradition or assumption, but in my estimation, there is one source of information that they pass completely by, not because they do not know of it, but because of the time involved to do the research, and the source may not be readily available.

The source I speak of is old newspapers. By old newspapers I do not mean papers that you may have stuck back in the garage or shed some eight or ten years ago, but old papers that were printed around the turn of the century, also any that were printed in the nineteenth century, even those of the eighteenth century. Although old newspapers of the periods mentioned are far short in size and format of our modern metropolitan dailies or county weeklies, they did contain "genealogical tid-bits" of social gatherings, marriages, court records, death and obituary notices, etc. Yes, many a grandmother (and grandfather) did make the NEWS in her day!

I first became acquainted with the Tennessee State Library and Archives' project, "Operation Newspapers for Tennessee" in January 1962. This project of collecting all the known and available newspapers that were ever published in the different counties of the State of Tennessee and preserving them on microfilm for posterity, is, in my opinion, one of the greatest accomplishments of modern Archives, and as Mr. James E. Pike, Director of Restoration and Reproduction, states in their pamphlet, "non norunt haec monumenta mori" - these memorials know not death. This fact comes more in focus as we scan over the death and obituary notices that appeared in these early newspapers and realize that posterity will read of the death of their ancestors long after the tombstones and even the cemeteries have disappeared.

Checking the catalog that the Tennessee State Library and Archives sent me, I was very much surprised at the number of different newspapers that had been published at Jonesboro, Washington County, Tennessee, over the span of years since Tennessee became a state, and I was also pleased that I could purchase film of the HERALD AND TRIBUNE from 1869 to 1961 (23 reels). My interest in Washington County newspapers stems from the fact that I was born seven or eight miles northwest of Jonesboro (to be more exact, two miles west of Locust Mount near where the Glendale School is now), my mother's people (Baines, Cox, Jones, Gray, Hale) having been in that county for well over one hundred and fifty years.

My great-grandmother, Elizabeth Jones Baines, died in Washington County shortly after the 1870 census was taken, sometime in the year 1873. Did my great-grandmother make the NEWS in her day? I just had to find out, so I ordered the first two reels of the HERALD AND TRIBUNE (Volume I, #1, August 26, 1869 to Feb. 5, 1896, inclusive). The copies were photographed in chronological order, and I was very much disappointed to find that many, many issues were missing from this 27 year span covered by these two reels. Some twenty copies were missing from year 1873, and to make a long story short, my great-grandmother did not make the news in any of the papers, nor her husband (Samuel Baines) who died about the same time. However, many other peoples' grandparents did make the NEWS, not only through death and obituary notices, but also through births, court records, news items, etc. Realizing that there is a need for the death and obituary notices to be in printed form so they would be more readily available to everyone doing research in Washington County, I have undertaken the enormous task of abstracting and compiling these notices. I have already compiled those of the first reel (approximately 290), covering Aug. 26, 1869, Volume I, #1, to and including Feb. 25, 1875, Volume VI, #23. Am continuing my task on the second reel which covers from March 4, 1875, Volume VI, #24 to and including Feb. 5, 1896, Volume XXVII, #41. In the very near future I hope to have at least the first reel compilation typed, duplicated, and ready for distribution.

In my perusal for the notices, I came across a news item which I would term as genealogical, and it was of such interest to me that I copied it and am passing it on verbatim, with the hope that somewhere in this broad land of ours are descendants of this Mrs. Headerick who are in desperate need of the information that the article contains. This news item appeared in the Washington County HERALD AND TRIBUNE dated February 14, 1874, Volume V, #21 as follows:

"There is a widow lady living near St. Clair, Hawkins County, named Mrs. Rachel Headerick, whose age links together the three last past generations. She was born in Pittsylvania County, Virginia, October 11, 1779, and therefore has attained the remarkable longevity of nearly ninety-five years. Her maiden name was Barnard and she married John Headerick, December 24, 1801. Ten children blessed this union, the eldest, Peggy Phillips and still living, was born in 1802 and is now seventy-two years old. Elijah H. Headerick was born July 17, 1804 and is seventy and still living. The youngest child was born December 24, 1824. All the children are a spritely group of scions, whose locks are whitening into the final harvest of death.

But it is of the central figure of this family circle we wish to speak of more particularly, Mrs. Headerick herself.

She has sixty-two grandchildren, sixty-three great grandchildren and six great-great-grandchildren. She never drank a cup of coffee in her life, using milk and chocolate in its place. Her sight is unimpaired and she reads a great deal. Her mind is active and vigorous and she vividly recollects the scenes and events of her early childhood and recounts them in the clearest and most entertaining style. She has been a member of the Baptist Church since 1805. The infirmities of age bear lightly upon this relic of the Revolutionary era, and she performs a considerable amount of manual labor, but her chief employment is spinning fine flax sewing thread.

Answer of William Morrow filed Nov. 21, 1822

...true that said John Miller deceased did enter into a partnership for the supply of the troops in 1815...said John by no means complied with the terms...he failed to advance anything near the amount of capital that he ought to have done...did not deliver the rations to the troops...denies that the Book was left in his shop, but states that it was kept by said John in the house of a Mr. Thomas who lived near there...denies any part of changing the records...Respondent believes said John died in 1820...partnership between said John and respondent terminated early in 1816... John well knew that his claim was unjust...would have pressed for it many years ago, as it was not his character to be very quiet or indulgent when he had debts upon any one...Respondent denies all fraud...prays to be dismissed...C A C White atto pro respt

John Sutherlin (Seal)

John Sutherland Jr. (Seal)

To the Honorable the Judges of the Court of Errors and Appeals in and for the second Circuit in the State of Tennessee now sitting in equity.

...your Orator John Sutherland states that in the State of Virginia on the 7 Sept. 1802...he bargained for and purchased of a certain Pleasant Hardwick a citizen of the said State of Virginia a certain tract of land...200 acres...lying on Caney Creek in the County of Pittsylvania...in Virginia...to secure the payment of part of the consideration money agreed...executed a bond to said Pleasant Hardwick...75 pounds of Virginia currency...Pleasant Hardwick made and executed a deed for said land to a certain Quinn Morton the son-in-law of your Orator to whom your Orator had given said tract of land for love and affection...that on or about 31 Oct. 1802 said Hardwick assigned said bond to a certain James Colquhoun...of Pittsylvania County, Virginia...afterwards in the Spring of 1803 that Colquhoun as assignee of said Hardwick instituted a suit...Court of Pleas and Quarter Sessions...Pittsylvania County...against your Orator and recovered a judgment... After said judgment writs of injunction were allowed your Orator...was assured by his counsel that said judgment would be finally enjoined... Your Orator in the fall of 1804 removed from said State of Virginia to the State of Tennessee where he now resides that after he had come to Tennessee his attorney John Dabney was appointed Judge...a rule was made on your Orator to give new security for the prosecution of the said bill...was dismissed for want of security...said James Colquhoun has since departed this life... Robert Colquhoun administered on his estate...instituted suit in the Circuit Court held for the County of Anderson in the State of Tennessee...for the sum of 75 pounds and interest from 7 Sept. 1802...and costs...judgment was recovered...your Orator filed his bill for an injunction...was allowed him. Attorney of Robert Colquhoun, Thos. Emmerson, suggested that the said Robert had departed this life...before your orator or said Emmerson could ascertain who had administered on the estate of said Robert...your Orator procured from Pittsylvania County Virginia letters of administration granted to a certain Thomas Shelton of said county on the estate of Robert...William Colquhoun son of said Robert has the management of the estate of both Robert and James... place of residence of Pleasant Hardwick is unknown to your Orator. ...charges that at the time of the sale of the 200 acres that said Pleasant Hardwick had no title therefor either legal or equitable...neither your Orator nor said Quinn Morton has been able to get the possession of the land...the title your Orator believes is in a certain Sophia Going...Sophia had pretended to give said land to her son Sherrid Going who as he is informed sold the land to Hardwick but no title had ever been made...

Your Orator prays that the said Pleasant Hardwick, Thomas Shelton and all other persons concerned together with the clerk and sheriff of the county of Anderson may be enjoined from the collection of said judgment...

John Sutherlin

Decree-all parties were perpetually enjoined from further proceedings to collect the judgment...18 Dec. 1825.
